INTRODUCTION

A military order signed by the President on June 13, 1942, established the Office of Strategic Services (OSS), which took over the main functions of the discontinued Office of the Coordinator of Information. The latter agency had been established by a Presidential order of July 11, 1941. William J. Donovan, former Coordinator of Information, was named Director of the newly established Office of Strategic Services and served in that capacity until the agency was abolished by an Executive order effective October 1, 1945. At that time the agency's records and some remaining functions were divided between the Department of State and the Department of the Army.

During its existence the Office of Strategic Services was under the jurisdiction of the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff. Its main functions were gathering, evaluating, and analyzing intelligence for use in promoting the war effort, together with planning and executing programs relating to the procurement of intelligence. Psychological warfare operations, the fostering and directing of resistance movements, and the dissemination of foreign propaganda were additional functions of OSS. Part of the overall propaganda program was carried on by the Office of War Information. On March 9, 1943, however, an Executive order was issued transferring all of the foreign propaganda activities, except those for Latin America, to the Office of War Information.

The records described in this inventory are the textual records in Record Group 226, Records of the Office of Strategic Services, and amount to about 930 cubic feet. They generally cover the period 1941-46. They consist almost entirely of records of the Research and Analysis Branch, its divisions, committees, and field offices.

Many of the records created by the Office of Strategic Services are in the custody of the Department of State, the Department of the Army, and the Central Intelligence Agency. The Department of State's authorization must be obtained before individuals are permitted access to the records described in the inventory.

I N V E N T O R Y

TEXTUAL RECORDS OF THE OFFICE OF STRATEGIC SERVICES

I. Records of the Research and Analysis Branch

The main function of the Branch was the procurement and processing of all types of intelligence required for operations or requested by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the armed forces, and other Government agencies authorized to receive and make use of intelligence. The Branch also was responsible for the preparation of studies, maps, charts, and other graphic materials based on accumulated knowledge.

The Branch was organized along both geographic and functional lines. The geographic divisions covered the areas of Europe-Africa, the Far East, Latin America, and the Soviet Union. The functional units included the Central Information Division, which was the repository for intelligence documents obtained by all branches of OSS and from other intelligence agencies, except those documents requiring special security measures provided by the Registry of OSS.

Inventory: NM-54 (1965)

Security-classified records of the Research and Analysis Branch including its divisions, committees, and field offices. Primary responsibility for declassification guidance on OSS R & A records resides in its successor, The Department of State. However, because OSS operational documents are widely scattered among this file, the CIA will want to provide appropriate guidance in those cases.

Descriptions of some records of CIA interest pre-dating 1943 can be found under Entries 3,4,5,7,9,10,11,16,19,21,30,46,51, 53,55,83,86.
